EDM Intern. Strategy R USD

Fund's Manager comment EDM Strategy

September was a challenging month for financial markets, marked by a sharp divergence between large-cap technology stocks and the rest of the financial asset universe. The main focus was the rise in long-term interest rates and heightened volatility in fixed income markets, with the U.S. 10-year Treasury bond recording its largest monthly increase since 2022. This move was driven by persistent inflation, rising energy prices, and a more restrictive stance from the Federal Reserve. Despite this, the U.S. economy continued to demonstrate resilience, with upward revisions to GDP growth and robust consumer spending, reinforcing the higher-for-longer interest rate environment.

Despite these headwinds, Artificial Intelligence (AI) continued to provide key support for U.S. equities. Large technology and communication companies once again led the market, offsetting weakness across most sectors and helping major indices remain close to all-time highs.

As a result, September ended with mixed performance across markets. The S 500 declined slightly (-0.38%), while the Nasdaq once again outperformed, advancing close to +1.86%, supported by major AI-related technology companies. In contrast, the MSCI Europe NR fell by -2.40%, weighed down by renewed inflationary pressures and higher sensitivity to rising energy costs.

EDM Strategy declined by -2.65% during the month, slightly underperforming its benchmark, the MSCI Europe NR, which fell by -2.40%. Year-to-date performance stands at -1.51% for EDM Strategy, compared with +9.64% for the index, which has been strongly supported by the solid performance of the financial and energy sectors.

The best-performing positions continued to be those linked to AI. This was particularly the case for semiconductor and power generation companies, both essential for the deployment of data centers, which maintained strong growth momentum and continued to benefit from upward earnings revisions. The main contributors were ASML (+10%), ASM International (+9.9%), and Iberdrola (+2.65%).

On the negative side, DSV (-13.9%) detracted from performance after the company’s latest communications were more cautious than expected. The road transport division is facing a number of operational challenges that are preventing management from focusing on extracting synergies from its most recent acquisition. Nevertheless, the air and sea freight divisions continue to show a much more constructive trend, supported by higher freight rates.

Despite a month with no earnings releases and weak market performance, we took the opportunity to meet with most of the companies held in the portfolio and assess the evolution of their businesses. The overall message was positive, with strong visibility ahead of third-quarter earnings releases and confirmation of expectations for fiscal year 2026.

In this highly volatile environment, we maintain a balanced portfolio composed of high-quality companies, leading players in sectors with attractive long-term prospects, low leverage, and strong pricing power. The portfolio remains well positioned to capture the best long-term growth opportunities.

Risk Profile

Risks

This Fund has the following core inherent risks (non-exhaustive list):

- Investing involves risk including possible loss of principal.
- The value of all investments and the income derived therefrom can decrease as well as increase.
- With a portfolio concentrated in a small number of companies, the risk is higher than a more diversified fund.
- The fund's focus on European markets may result in higher sensitivity to regional economic, political, and regulatory changes.
- There is no assurance that the investment objective of the Fund will be achieved.
- To the extent that the Fund is invested in or denominated in a currency other than yours, the cost and return in your currency may increase or decrease due to exchange rate fluctuations.

Glossary

Alpha: The excess return generated by a fund compared with its benchmark index. The more skilled the manager, the higher the alpha achieved for the fund.

Financial Leverage: An investment strategy that increases investment capacity by using debt or third-party capital, magnifying both potential gains and potential losses.

Article 8 SFDR: Category established under the Sustainable Finance Disclosure Regulation (SFDR) for financial products that promote environmental and/or social characteristics.

Operating Profit: A company's gross income minus operating expenses and other business-related costs, such as salaries, cost of goods sold (COGS), and depreciation.

Beta: Measures the average variation in a fund's returns relative to the overall market. A fund with a beta greater than 1 tends, on average, to fluctuate more than the market, while a beta below 1 tends to fluctuate less than the market.

CapEx (Capital Expenditure): Investment made by a company to acquire or improve fixed, long-term physical assets, such as real estate, plants, buildings, technology, or equipment.

Market Capitalisation (Market Cap): A measure of a company's size, calculated by multiplying the total number of shares outstanding by the current share price. Companies are generally classified as small-cap, mid-cap, or large-cap, although these categories may vary depending on the market or portfolio considered.

Downside Deviation: Refers to the volatility of an investment's negative returns. It helps investors better understand how much an investment may decline during adverse market conditions and supports more informed investment decisions.

EBITDA (Earnings Before Interest, Taxes, Depreciation and Amortisation): A metric used to measure a company's operating profitability. It is calculated by adding interest expenses, taxes, depreciation, and amortisation back to net income.

Ongoing Charges: The operating costs of a fund over a one-year period. They are calculated as a percentage of the fund's average assets and include, among other expenses, management fees.

High Yield (HY): A financial instrument issued by a company with a low credit rating, below BBB-, and therefore carrying a higher risk of default. These companies issue debt at higher interest rates than companies with stronger credit ratings (Investment Grade).

Investment Grade (IG): A group of credit ratings indicating a low risk of default (ranging from AAA to BBB-). Companies rated within this range can issue debt at lower interest rates than those with poorer credit ratings and therefore benefit from lower financing costs. AAA is the highest credit rating and is achieved only by a limited number of highly solvent countries and companies.

Gross Margin: The difference between a company's sales revenue and its direct production costs (excluding depreciation, financial expenses, and commercial expenses). It is usually expressed as a percentage of total sales. This ratio is a measure of operating efficiency, as it indicates the profitability generated from each unit of revenue.

Operating Margin: A metric that measures the profit a company earns from each unit of sales revenue after covering variable production costs, such as wages and raw materials, but before interest and taxes.

NAV (Net Asset Value): The current market value of a portfolio's assets minus its liabilities.

P/E Ratio (Price-to-Earnings Ratio): A valuation metric used to assess a company. It is calculated by dividing the market price of a share by earnings per share.

Profit Warning: A warning issued by a listed company indicating that its future profits will be lower than expected or that it may even incur losses.

Basis Point(s) (bp): One basis point is equal to one hundredth of a percentage point (i.e. 0.01%).

Sharpe Ratio: Measures the risk-adjusted return of an investment, indicating how much excess return is generated for each unit of volatility assumed.

TER (Total Expense Ratio): A metric that measures a fund's total annual costs as a percentage of its average assets under management.

Tracking Error: The difference between the actual performance of a position (typically an entire portfolio) and that of its benchmark index. It measures the degree of deviation from the benchmark. A tracking error close to zero indicates that the fund closely replicates its benchmark, whereas a higher value indicates more active management and a greater level of risk.

Volatility: A measure of the upward and downward fluctuations in the value of an asset over time. It is generally regarded as a measure of risk.

YTD (Year-to-Date): Reflects the cumulative performance of a company, investment fund, or financial asset from the beginning of the fiscal or calendar year to the present date.
